

RECRUITASSIST · LANDING PAGE

Website Spec

Section-by-section build spec for the Recruit Assist page, with the actual copy. A working HTML implementation ships alongside this document — use that as the reference build and this as the reasoning behind it.

01 What this page has to do

Convert a recruitment firm owner who has been putting off hiring a resourcer for a year — by making the comparison to that hire explicit, and by removing every reason they've been putting it off.

The page is not selling a virtual assistant. If a visitor leaves thinking "VA service," the page has failed, because that frame anchors them to a low price and a bad previous experience. Every section is built to keep them comparing us to a payroll hire instead.

PRIMARY CONVERSION

Book a desk audit

A 20-minute call, framed as a diagnosis rather than a sales call: which side of your desk is blocking the other? Named "desk audit" throughout — never "discovery call," which every recruiter recognises as a sales call.

SECONDARY CONVERSION

Download the one-pager

Email capture for anyone not ready to talk. Delivers the flyer PDF. This is the majority of first-visit traffic and should not be treated as a failure state.

THREE RULES THAT OVERRIDE ANYTHING ELSE ON THIS PAGE

- 1. No country is named, anywhere. Not in copy, not in imagery, not in an FAQ answer. See the offer architecture, section 06.
- 2. The word "VA" appears exactly once — in the objection-handling section, where we name it in order to reject the comparison. Nowhere else.
- 3. No pipeline or revenue guarantee. This is a capacity offer. The $50K/90-day guarantee belongs to The Unreplaceable Recruiter and must not leak onto this page.

02 Page structure

#	SECTION	PURPOSE
1	Hero	Name the whipsaw in the headline. One CTA, one secondary link.
2	The problem	The 360 cycle written so they recognise their own week. No product yet.
3	The four pillars	What the assistant actually does. Concrete tasks, not capabilities.
4	The two halves	Win The Work / Fill The Work. The buying decision, made obvious.
5	The comparison	Three columns: resourcer, $100K ops hire, Recruit Assist. The commercial argument.
6	Pricing	$1,500 / $3,000. Two rows, no tiers. Sits immediately after the comparison, on purpose.
7	How it's delivered	Trained, managed, systems included. Kills the bad-VA memory.
8	First 14 days	Timeline. Removes the "I don't have time to onboard someone" objection.
9	Objections	Four questions answered plainly, including the VA one.
10	Close	Restate the promise. Book a desk audit.

Deliberately absent: a testimonial wall (we don't have enough named recruitment clients yet and fake-feeling social proof is worse than none), a three-tier pricing table, a team photo section, and any logo strip we can't substantiate.

03 Section 1 · Hero

Hero

DARK BAND · FULL BLEED · ABOVE THE FOLD

Eyebrow: For recruitment & search firms

H1: Split the desk. Keep the billings.

Sub: One trained assistant who runs your outreach, your sourcing, or both — with our systems behind them. So BD never stops the week delivery gets loud.

Primary CTA: Book a desk audit

Secondary: Or see what they actually do ↓

Why this headline. “Split the desk” is recruiter-native language that a non-recruiter wouldn't write, which signals immediately that this was built for them. “Keep the billings” answers the fear the first half creates — that splitting the desk means splitting the money. Do not soften it to something like “More time to bill.” The specificity is the credibility.

Build: ink background #0A0F24 with the green/indigo radial gradients from brand .css. Four-segment accent rule at the base of the band. Single button, amber #E3A008, dark text. No hero image, no stock photography of people at laptops.

04 Section 2 · The problem

The 360 whipsaw

LIGHT BACKGROUND · CENTRED, MAX 42REM

H2: You already know exactly how this goes.

The desk is quiet, so you do BD. BD works, so you win roles. Roles need filling, so you stop doing BD and go into delivery. You fill them, you bill, it's a good month.

Then eight weeks later the pipeline is empty — because nobody was doing BD while you were sourcing.

That's not a discipline problem. It's a structural one. A 360 desk has two full-time jobs on it and one person, and whichever job is loudest that week wins.

Why it's written in second person and present tense. The visitor should recognise their own last quarter, not read a description of a market. No statistics in this section — numbers create distance, and this section's only job is recognition. The product is not mentioned once.

05 Section 3 · The four pillars

What they actually do

4-UP GRID · 2x2 ON TABLET · STACKED ON MOBILE

Cards 1–2 green (Win The Work), cards 3–4 indigo (Fill The Work), matching the flyer exactly so the two assets are recognisably one family.

1 • OUTREACH — Client conversations, running every day.

LinkedIn campaigns and conversations · cold email sequences, built and sent · follow-up, reply triage, meetings booked into your diary

2 • PRESENCE — The collateral that makes outreach land.

Adverts written and posted · website, LinkedIn page and posts · case studies, mailers, market updates

3 • SOURCE — Finding them, so you're talking to them.

Mapping, longlists, boolean and x-ray · headhunting outreach to passive candidates · MPC and float lists off your own bench

4 • RUN THE DESK — Everything that currently eats your evening.

Screening prep, CVs formatted to your spec · scheduling, references, compliance chasing · ATS hygiene and pipeline reporting

Every bullet is a task, not a capability. "Boolean and x-ray", "MPC and float lists", "CVs formatted to your spec" — these are the words that prove we know the job. A recruiter scanning this page is checking whether we understand their work, and the vocabulary is the proof. Do not generalise these into "sourcing support" or "admin assistance."

06 Section 4 · The two halves

Buy a half, or the whole desk

2-UP · FULL-COLOUR PANELS · THEN AMBER BAR

Left panel (green): WIN THE WORK · Pillars 1 + 2

Outreach + Presence — BD that runs without you.

“I only do BD when the desk goes quiet — and by then it's already too late.”

Right panel (indigo): FILL THE WORK · Pillars 3 + 4

Source + Run the Desk — delivery, off your plate.

“I'm winning roles I don't have time to fill properly. I'm turning work away.”

Amber bar beneath, full width: Both halves together = Recruit Assist. One assistant across the desk, or two specialists, one per side.

The quotes do the selling. Each is a sentence an owner has said out loud, so the visitor self-selects rather than being told which they need. Make the panels visually equal — no “most popular” badge, no highlighting. The point is that both are legitimate, which is what makes the choice feel like a diagnosis rather than an upsell.

07 Section 5 · The comparison

What you're actually choosing between

3-UP · THE MOST IMPORTANT SECTION ON THE PAGE

Columns A and B muted and grey-bordered. Column C green, tinted background, visually the answer.

A · A resourcer on payroll

Salary, plus employer NI or payroll tax · pension, holiday, sick cover · desk, laptop, software seats · weeks to hire, ~3 months to ramp · you write the training · you manage them daily · if it doesn't work, you carry it

B · A $100K ops hire

Six figures all-in before tooling · needs a defined role to step into · generalist, not recruiting-native · long notice periods both ways · a serious bet for a firm under 20 heads

C · Recruit Assist

One flat monthly fee · no employer costs of any kind · trained on recruitment before day one · systems and tooling included · managed by us, not by you · replaced if the fit is wrong · 90-day terms, buy-out path

This section is the page. It is the only place the visitor's internal comparison gets set, and everything above exists to earn the right to it. Keep the “$100K ops hire” wording literal and unhedged — a specific number is what makes the comparison land, and it's the framing the offer was built to win.

Closing line beneath the three columns: “You're not comparing us to a VA. You're comparing us to the resourcer you can't quite justify yet — at a fraction of the cost, with none of the employment risk.” This is the only appearance of the word VA on the page.

Section 6 · Pricing

Two rows, no tiers	DIRECTLY BENEATH THE COMPARISON · LIGHT BACKGROUND
H2: One price. One unit. No tiers. Row 1 — One assistant · $1,500/mo One trained assistant, ~40 hrs/week, on either half — or splitting their week across both. Row 2 — Two assistants · $3,000/mo One on Win The Work, one on Fill The Work. The full desk, with neither side waiting on the other. Beneath both: Every engagement includes the training, the systems and campaign stack, our management, replacement if the fit is wrong, and 90-day terms. Nothing else to buy.
Why two rows and not three tiers. A three-tier table invites comparison shopping and makes the middle option feel like a compromise. Two rows reads as a unit price and a quantity — which is what it is — and keeps the decision on how much of my desk do I want covered rather than which package am I being upsold into. No “most popular” badge, no strike-through anchor, no annual toggle. Placement is deliberate. This sits immediately after the three-column comparison, while $70,000 and $100,000 are still on screen. Seen cold, $1,500/mo is a number to be evaluated. Seen four seconds after “$100K ops hire,” it’s a relief. Do not move it above the comparison. Optional caption, if we want the maths visible: “$18,000 a year. A resourcer on $55,000 costs roughly $70,000 once employer taxes, pension, holiday, desk and software are counted.” Include it only if we’re comfortable defending the assumptions — and we should be.

09 Sections 7–8 · Delivery and the first 14 days

How it's delivered

6-ITEM CHECKLIST · 2 COLUMNS

One assistant, ~40 hrs/week, working only on your desk · Trained on recruitment before they ever reach you · Managed by us — you get output, not a management job · Our systems and campaign stack included, nothing to licence · Live work inside two weeks — no job spec, no interviews, no ramp · 90-day terms — replaced if the fit's wrong, buy-out path if it's right

"Managed by us — you get output, not a management job" is the strongest line in the entire offer and should be the visually heaviest item in this list. It is the precise answer to the previous bad experience nearly every prospect has had.

Your first two weeks

HORIZONTAL TIMELINE · STACKS ON MOBILE

Day 1 Desk audit — which side is blocked, what you run, what good looks like

Days 2–4 We match and brief an assistant before you ever meet them

Day 5 Introduction, access granted, shared channel opened

Days 6–10 First live work ships — adverts, ATS clean-up, first campaign built

Days 11–14 Cadence set. Daily written update, weekly review. It runs.

Purpose: defeat "I don't have time to onboard someone." The timeline shows the client's own involvement is roughly two conversations.
Close the section with: "You never write a job spec, never run an interview, and never have to let anyone go."

10 Section 9 · Objections

The four questions everyone asks

ACCORDION OR PLAIN STACKED Q&A

"I've tried a VA before and it was more work than it saved." Almost everyone has, and it's usually true. A general assistant arrives with no context, so you become their trainer and their manager. Ours arrive trained on recruitment process, already inside our systems, and we manage them. The difference isn't the person — it's everything wrapped around them.

"How do I know they'll be any good?" We recruit and vet against a recruitment-specific bar, train them before they're assigned, and replace them if the fit is wrong. You never run a hiring process and never have to let anyone go.

"What if my process is different?" It will be. The first week is spent learning your desk — your ATS, your templates, your tone, your definition of a good candidate. They work your way, not a generic way.

"What happens to my data and my candidates?" They work inside your systems, under your access controls, and everything they build stays in your ATS. You own all of it.

Answer honestly and briefly. Long answers read as defensive. The data question is asked more than people expect and a short, confident answer settles it.

11 Section 10 · Close

Final CTA

DARK BAND · FULL BLEED · MIRRORS THE HERO

H2: Stop choosing between BD and delivery.

Sub: Twenty minutes is enough to work out which side of your desk to take back first. If the honest answer is that you don't need us yet, that's what you'll hear.

CTA: Book a desk audit · Secondary: Download the one-pager

The “if you don't need us yet” line stays. It is the same disarming honesty the outreach playbooks are built on, and it materially raises the quality of who books. Removing it to raise raw volume would be a mistake.

12 Build notes

ITEM	SPEC
Type	Inter / Inter Display for headings and UI, Source Serif 4 for body prose. Both free. Same as every other asset.
Colour	Ink #0A0F24, green #12A06B (Win The Work), indigo #3D5BE0 (Fill The Work), amber #E3A008 (bundle + CTAs). Tokens are in brand.css.
Imagery	None. No stock photography, no illustrated characters, no flags or maps. Typography and colour blocks only — consistent with the flyer and cheaper to keep on-brand.
Responsive	Single column under 768px. The 3-up comparison stacks with Recruit Assist last, so it's the final thing read on mobile.
Form	Desk audit: name, firm, email, headcount, and one required select — “Which side of your desk is blocking the other?” with three options. That answer routes the call and pre-qualifies better than any other field.
Analytics	Track scroll depth to the comparison and pricing sections specifically. If visitors aren't reaching section 5, the problem is section 2, not the CTA.
Title / meta	Title: Recruit Assist — a trained recruitment assistant for your desk. Description leads with “split the desk” and the resourcer comparison, not with “virtual assistant”, which would attract exactly the wrong search intent.
Performance	Static page, inline CSS, self-hosted fonts, no third-party scripts beyond analytics and the booking embed. Should be under 200KB.

BEFORE THIS GOES LIVE

The existing Recruit Assist beta page has to come down or be rewritten. It sells a different offer (operating system plus operator), makes a "double your business in 90 days, guaranteed" claim this offer does not carry, and argues explicitly for one talent market over another. Two live pages under the same name making different promises is worse than having no page at all.

Build spec. Pairs with the working HTML implementation delivered alongside it, and with the canonical offer architecture. Copy in this document is final and approved for build; anything not specified here should be raised rather than invented. Pricing is $1,500/mo per assistant and $3,000 for two — confirmed, and reflected throughout this document and the build.
